TYPES OF FACEBOOK CONTENT

Here are some of the styles of content you will likely encounter on Facebook.

Photos/Images

Research has shown that Facebook posts with images get twice as much engagement, and account for the vast majority of content on Facebook.

Videos

Every day, 100 million hours of video are watched on Facebook. They're a great way to demonstrate your product or business in an informative and entertaining way.

Find your why

Do you want help to tell people about what you do and why you do it? Choose from the menu according to your appetite.

How hungry are you?

Carousels

Carousels are rotating sets of images. This can be a useful way to show off a series of images.

Reels

For the past few years, Meta has built a new short video format to compete with TikTok called Reels. Reels can help you create short-form videos between 15 seconds and 1 min long. You can use music, filters and the cutting tool to create interactive and trendy videos easily. A 2022 study from Hootsuite shows that Facebook has 60.8% user share when it comes to this type of content, meaning there is a whole audience waiting to be reached through Reels.

Stories

Stories appear at the top of the user's feed. They can be in the form of 5 second images, or a 20 second video. They are a useful way to quickly communicate with a lot of people, and more appropriate for informal material.

Half a billion people view Facebook Stories per day.

AR Filters

AR stands for Augmented Reality. This enables a display over your content which instructs the user on how they can interact with your content. This is a way to demonstrate a product and its applications.

You can include additional information in your profile. This could include contact details or your business' location and address.

Input your username

If you have a distinctive profile name which you use on other social media platforms such as Instagram or Twitter, you should also use this on your Facebook profile. This consistency is good for your branding, and allows users to find you easily. Your username can then be used as part of a “vanity” URL. It will appear as www.facebook.com/username

Install a call to action button

“Shop Now”, “Buy Now”, and “Donate Now” are just some examples of call to action buttons you can place on your Facebook profile. See here for the full list: <https://www.facebook.com/business/help/410873986524407>

Appointments Tool

You can now add appointments requests on your Facebook Page. This can strongly help if you are offering a service where appointments should be made for face-to-face or online interactions. Make sure your prospects have this option right at their fingertips. You can also sync your Facebook Page with some of the most popular appointment management tools.

Add a Messenger Button to your website

Meta made it very easy for prospects to contact you directly via Messenger. Through Meta Business Suite, you can add a chat plugin to your website. You can customise it and add frequently asked questions to help your prospect in the matter. Instant chat is as important as a Q&A section; prospects want to have the chance to directly interact with you. <https://www.facebook.com/business/help/1524587524402327>

Check your settings

Make sure that your page is visible to the public. The settings for this are under the privacy options.

DECIDE ON THE GOALS OF YOUR CAMPAIGN

Without deciding on the objectives of your campaign, you won't be able to decide if your campaign has been effective or not. It's also important to have a clear vision of what you hope to achieve, so that you can focus your energy on those goals.

Some examples of goals are:

- Increase number of customers
- Increase leads and conversions
- Increase brand awareness and interaction
- Reaching new customers
- Building a loyal customer base
- Employer Brand

A word about internal marketing

Internal marketing is marketing aimed at your staff and employees. Its goal is to make sure that employees are completely aware of their employees objectives and core values. It also has the benefit of increasing awareness of work being done outside of any specific employee's sphere, helping to get a better overall view of what the company does, and how the work of each employee contributes to the process.

Not only does this increase employee happiness, but it also benefits you in that happy employees are more likely to become brand evangelists - they'll speak positively about your organisation to the customers, staff, and potential hires with whom they interact. Further to this, the positive atmosphere around your company can lead to greater retention rates amongst staff, as well as making it easier to recruit top of the line employees in future. If your company has a good reputation, the best candidates for your next job opening will be more likely to come to you, saving time and money in the recruitment process.

Who is your target audience?

Facebook's demographics are very broad, so you'll benefit greatly from narrowing down your target audience. This audience will help to inform the amount and type of content you'll need to produce to appeal to them, and when you should post (more on this later). Your targeting options are: location, demographics (including age and gender), interests, behaviour, and Facebook friend connections.

DEVELOP A PLAN OR STRATEGY FOR YOUR CONTENT

Plan out the kind of content you wish to post ahead of time

Publish regularly, and on a fixed schedule. People will learn when you will publish your content, and view it out of habit. Make sure that your content is telling the story that you wish to tell. You can post a series of posts that lay out a story over time, or you can post stand-alone posts, perhaps advertising a product or service.

Helpful and engaging content is ideal. Give the users a reason to visit your page and engage with your posts. This doesn't mean that you shouldn't advertise your products or services, but if that's all you post then a large number of users will not engage with you, or worse: simply ignore your posts or unfollow.

You'll also want to decide when you'll post, and how often. For example, if you're targeting people of working age, then you may want to avoid posting during working hours. Two to three posts per week is ideal, especially if you're growing your audience. You can always reconsider this in the future, and increase the amount of posts you make.

A word about hashtags

Hashtags are very popular on various social media platforms, however, they seem to actually be detrimental to the performance of posts on Facebook. If you must, use one or two at the most. Your audience might end up being partial to their use, but generally speaking this is not the case.

Publishing your content

As we saw earlier, you can publish various types of content on the Facebook platform. You have to decide what kind of content is most appropriate to your audience.

Images, Videos, Reels, Events, Stories, and Live broadcasts are the most popular types of content right now.

- Images: Photos, still images, and gifs. These can be used to quickly and unobtrusively get your message across.
- Videos: Movement always attracts attention. Use videos to convey what a still image simply can't capture.

- Reels: Short-form video is trendy with Meta giving a big push to this type of content. Make sure to use it to convey a vibe, or show interactivity with a person on screen. It is a great tool for awareness purposes.
- Events: The Event tool allows you to announce webinars, offline events that are for prospects or for your employees. Use it to organically advertise events to come. You can also create a discussion through an event so participants can talk, ask questions and more!
- Stories: Stories can be posted to your page's news feed, and sent directly to your followers. These videos disappear after 24 hours, so they make a fantastic way to share a limited time offer. Facebook stories are displayed at the top of a user's feed, and so they are usually the first thing a user sees when they visit Facebook.
- Live broadcasts: Facebook live allows you to broadcast to your users live. This is a great way to host a Q and A, display a product in use, or simply engage with your audience.

It's worth using a variety of post formats to keep your followers interested, and to find new customers. Make it interactive by adding a Messenger button so as to pull prospects to connect with you.

Review your content

Before posting, make sure that your content is following these guidelines:

- Your message is consistent with your brand
- The formatting of your content is correct, and compliant with your style guide
- It is helping to achieve your goals
- It can't be misinterpreted or misconstrued in a negative way
- There are no typos or grammatical errors

Schedule your content

Decide when to post your content. As mentioned above, this should be dependent on the demographics and behaviour of your target audience. According to a study by Buffer, it's best to post between 1 PM and 3 PM, from Monday to Saturday, with an increase in engagement on Thursdays and Fridays. Of course, this is a very broad study, and may not apply to your audience. It's recommended that you try out a few different schedules, to find what works for you and your brand.

You can now plan content through the Planner tool with Meta Business Suite on both Facebook and Instagram. You can plan posts, stories and ads. The tool calculates as well when your audience is the most active and advises you on the best time to post.

INTERACTING WITH YOUR AUDIENCE

People are more trusting of a brand which engages with their audience. It shows a more human side, and builds confidence in the users, as well as making your brand more memorable. Interacting with your users doesn't have to be limited to comments on posts, there are also Facebook groups.

What are Facebook groups?

Facebook groups are a space in which users gather to discuss a certain range of topics, particular to that group. These groups can be a great space to build your credibility among users by contributing useful, helpful, expert content. This could be as simple as providing a solution to a problem, recommending a product to someone with a specific need, or providing content which the users may enjoy. Many groups are open to having brands be a part of a group, usually with the caveat that they don't simply use the space to advertise. So feel free to get into the relevant groups through your Page and participate in the conversations to drive organic interest to your brand.

You can also create your own group.

This is a good thing to do so your customers can talk with each other. But it is also an excellent tool internally by having a group created for your employees. It can strengthen community and make your employer branding even better.

- Click the top right of Facebook and select Group.
- Enter your group name.
- Select the privacy option. If you select private, select whether to make your group visible or hidden.
- Add people to your group.
- Click Create.

ANALYSE THE PERFORMANCE OF YOUR POSTS

Now that you've followed the guide and published your posts, and hopefully received some notice from the users, it's time to check the data and see how your content is performing.

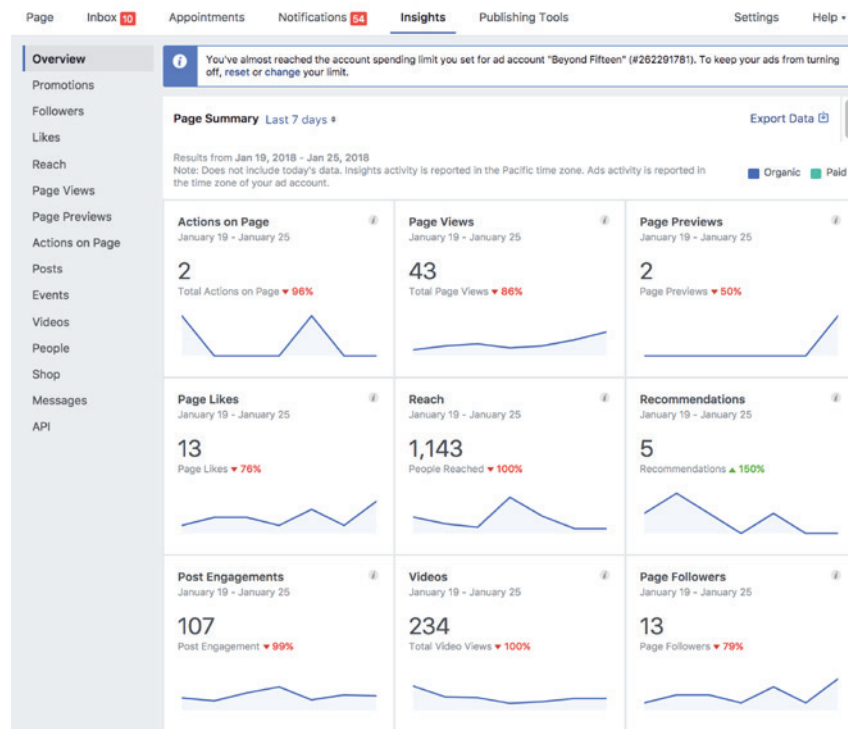

Key metrics

To view this data, you'll need to access Facebook Insights.

To see Page Insights:

- From your News Feed, Pages in the left menu
- Go to your Page
- Click Insights in the left menu

It looks like this:

Here are the most important metrics you need to analyse

- Reach: How many people were your posts displayed to.
- Post engagement: The amount of users who interacted with your post
- Reactions: “Likes”, “Loves” and so on that your posts received
- Comments: Here you can see which posts caused people to reply
- Shares: How many times a user shared your content
- Page likes: Liking a page is akin to following it. This shows how many people are following your page.
- Page reviews: Users are allowed to post reviews of your business. This shows how many did so..
- Page views: The number of people who visited your page
- Actions on page: The number of users who clicked on the call to action button
- People metrics: Information on the people who visited your page. (General demographics)
- Video metrics: The number of times your videos were viewed
- Group metrics: Information on the number of people in groups related to your page

Evaluate and adjust

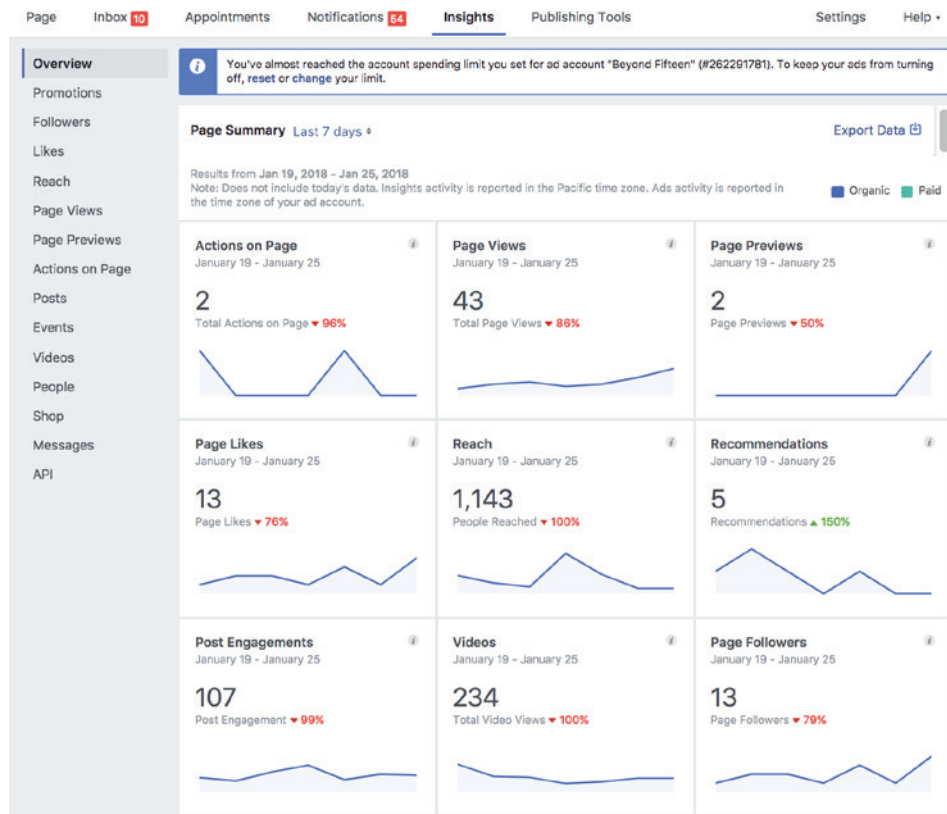

You should always aim to improve your metrics. More impressions means more followers means more customers. Use the data to find what's working for your brand and then create more similar content. If something isn't working for you then there's no shame in completely reworking your posts, or taking a totally different direction. What works for one company doesn't necessarily work for the next, and even that can change over time. Keep moving and keep improving.

Meta Business Suite

Meta Business Suite can be an excellent tool to manage Meta platforms, that is: Facebook, Instagram. You can create and schedule content for Facebook and Instagram, plan it in advance and see in detail their performance. If you manage several businesses at the same time, you can use the same Meta Business Account, making it easier to switch from one and another.

Meta Business Suite also has a great Inbox management tool where you can reply to direct messages from FB/IG, as well as comments and messages from your Chat plugin on your website. You can add details about prospects here, as well as labels to filter your conversations and leads per priority.

The Ads tool is even more detailed than simply boosting a post via Facebook or Instagram. You can create an ad and be more specific on the audience you wish to target. You will as well view the results of your ads in there and recommendations from Meta to increase their performance. However, we advise to instead use the Meta Ads Manager Platform as you can build a stronger digital advertising strategy.

The Insights tool is more detailed than the Facebook one as you can see both Facebook and Instagram data at the same time. The data is separated into results, content and audience, while also having the option to set goals for the month to come, that is to grow followers or increase reach. At last, feel free to export that data to share it with the rest of your team or to use it in a report.
